7 Strengths for Reading Success

Reading, writing, and arithmetic... For generations, that's what we've been told students need. But what do they truly need to be successful in those subjects, other subjects, and life? They need strength, in all its forms.

In her work, Pam Allyn focuses on seven strengths designed to help all children, regardless of their background, become and remain successful: belonging, curiosity, friendship, kindness, confidence, courage, and hope. Pam is founding director of LitWorld, a global literacy initiative that serves children across the United States and in more than 60 countries. Her new book, Every Child a Super Reader combines research, anecdotes, activities, and advice, giving teachers the background they need to transform every student into a committed, compassionate, and resilient learner.
